

We weren't. – Press Release – September 2008

Three of the most controversial terrorists of the ongoing War on Terror are now depicted as Disney villains in this piece.

The triptych renders a digitalized fantasy which conjoins terrorists with villain characters from famous western cartoons, and underlines the manipulations of consensus/dissent by the "Information Operations Roadmap" military program.

Nonexistent terrorists have been some of the most wanted, and have been identified as dangerous official enemies.

They are true war celebrities with fake names, or alleged leaders of insurgent groups against peace heroes.

These identities are permanently the subject of debates about conspiracy theories and are constantly discussed on official main-stream news.

These myths have grown on internet like folk tales, where legends spread fast as part of socio-induced anxiety through conspiracy conjectures constructed by citizen journalists and propaganda by the dominant media structure.
